

TINY WANDERING MARY UP AGAIN BEFORE JUDGE

Seven-Year-Old Rossi Girl Makes Her Fifth Appearance in the Children's Court.

ONE WAIF FINDS A HOME

Mrs. Corcoran, With Fourteen of Her Own, Adopts Child of Neighbor.

Boy burglars had a hard time of it today in the Children's Court, when between 10 o'clock and 1 more than two dozen juvenile culprits had their checkered careers interrupted by the strong arm of the law.

Judge Hoyt was the youthful Magistrate who tempered justice with mercy, and by words rather than fines attempted to turn the paths of the wrongdoers into the straight and narrow way all good little boys should go.

First, there was Louis Vranesky, whom tiny Louis Levey accused of stealing his candy wafers, by the peddling on the street of which he earned his daily bread. Louis, a brave little fellow of nine years, with eyes brimming with tears, sat on the witness chair and told a straight forward tale, which convinced the Judge of the Justice of his claim. Vranesky, one of those boy bandits who help themselves by brutal force to the savings of the younger boys, cowered as his youthful accuser charged him with the heinous crime.

Tells All About It.

"It was just this way," explained little Louis, "that interested and alert Judge while he fixed the culprit Louis with large accusing eyes. 'I was selling my candy and took him along and grabbed it away from me,' said some other boy who took my money out of my pockets and ran down the street. The boy got him, though, and, please, Judge, make him give back my candy and money, too.'

And so a $1 fine was fixed on the little bandit much to his chagrin. Eight small boys of ten and twelve were brought before the bar. There is a bad band of boys for you! Each and every one is familiar with the colorless wafers and worn steps of the Children's Court, for often before they have been caught by a vigilant cop. The black robes of the judges, the uniforms of the officers, and the clear voice of Clerk Coler calling out their names, are all an old story to the tiny culprits who with the blase air of hardened sinners march up single file to meet the unrelenting eye of Judge Hoyt. The rickety platform fairly creaks with the weight of its burden, for besides the eight boys, a dozen or more of the surrounding mothers, James' children, a commanding real estate agent, unfolds a really serious tale in which the eight are accused of playing prominent roles in a new version of "The Thin Man."

Looted a House.

At No. 5 East Forty-sixth street they carried away chamber pots, washstands and radiators without a bit of notice that could be looked from an empty house. Louisa Kunkel, ringleader of the gang, while in the case of Johnnie Asylum, while in the case of Johnnie Heins, a lad of only nine, sentence is suspended. The other six are hurried away in the rear an hour to await further investigation into their bungar rigs.

A ripple of merriment spread through the court when old Mrs. Eloran, affectionately called "Mother of Corcoran's Roof," took the stand to prove that she would allow her to adopt the illustrated waif. And then, though the mother of fourteen young ones of her own, her motherly heart yearned toward the worse than motherless waif. Then, when she clung to the rotting trash which sticks she begged for the child.

"There's always room for one more," Judge said. "So we do, we say. Fourteen already are ready to welcome Thimby, for we believe in the more the merrier in the Corcoran family."

Wandering Mary Appears.

tiny Rossi's name is the next upon the calendar, and Mary, though only seven, has already called five times upon the Children's Court. Mary, it develops, has descended from the family fire-side and now, high on a chair, she once more stands pleading for one more chance.

I have had to keep my hands submerged deep down in my collar, all the time digging her hands into her tear-filled eyes. "He's in the hospital," she said, "and I'm the only man." The man just walked up to paper with a pistol and said, "Now you stand still until I see if I can hit you straight." And then he pulled the trigger. I went up last night just to see him but I got lost. Please, Judge, don't send me away. I want to go home once more, and the man will pay with a dismal drop upon the initial debt."

With a fatherly scolding the tiny waif was delivered into the hands of her mother and with a smile chasing away her tears, she wandered out of court close to her mother's heels.

LIFECAR SENT OUT TO CREW OF WRECKED SCHOONER.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 12.—A three-masted schooner was driven ashore on the Virginia coast early yesterday between Little Island and False Cape life-saving station. The wind is blowing thirty miles an hour from the northwest, with high seas.

The schooner, whose identity has not been established, will be a total wreck, nose aboard, failing to get the life-saving from the water. For the use of the breeches buoy this method of rescue had to be abandoned and the life-savers sent out a lifecar.

Mrs. Brown was a member of a wealthy Kentucky family who had been married beneath her.
